In Search of a Home

If "the Anthropocene" suggests a rupture of the Earth System, producing a future which looks nothing like our past, what is the role of historians in this predicament? Julia Adeney Thomas addresses this question in three ways, explaining why many scientists find "the Anthropocene" a compelling concept; showing how this concept challenges the historical discipline; and finally demonstrating how historians, through self-reflection on our practices, might contribute. Using the example of early modern Japan, she proposes a new form of critical history as we move from modernity's promise of freedom and abundance to the more modest goal of sustainability with decency.

Dr. Thomas is Associate Professor in the Department of History at the University of Notre Dame. She specializes in political and environmental questions, the history of Japan, and historiography and theory. She has written or edited five books, including Japan at Nature's Edge: The Environmental Context of a

Gendered Bodies: Women's Visual Art in Contemporary China C

Dr. Cui will discuss her groundbreaking work Gendered Bodies (U. of Hawaii Press), introducing the audience to women's visual art in contemporary China by examining how the visual process of gendering reshapes understandings of historiography, sexuality, pain, and space. Through analyzing a selection of artworks and artists—both well- and little-known—she presents a critical review of women's art in contemporary China in relation to art traditions, classical and contemporary.

Dr. Cui is Professor of Asian Studies and Director of Cinema Studies at Bowdoin College. She is the

This talk revisits the debate about foreign implications of Chinese nationalism in the context of China's increasingly confrontational and assertive behaviour in recent years. It argues that while the Chinese government made effective efforts to make sure that Chinese foreign policy was not dictated by the emotional nationalistic rhetoric, the good old days of a moderate China are gone as the Chinese government has become more willing to follow the popular nationalist calls in pursuing its so-called core interests.
